

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE „EUROPEAN UNION AND THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH 2014+“

11 May 2015 Bratislava, Slovakia

Institute of European Democrats (IED), an innovative political and cultural Research Institute supported by the European Parliament and Young Europeans (original - Mladí Európania, ME), a Slovak pro-European youth organization, organized the International Conference „EUROPEAN UNION AND THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH 2014+“, which took place on 11 May 2015 (Monday) in the premises of the Conference Centre in the Tatra Hotel in Bratislava, Slovakia.

The Conference focused on exploring the opportunities which the international projects within the European Union bring to young people. The primary goal of the Conference was to raise awareness about the possibilities of participation and professional and personal growth of young people in diverse programmes and concepts that the European Union offers to students and young professionals. The Conference also presented the concrete opportunities for young people and discussed the challenges and problems that could occur within implementation of the EU programmes. The Conference was organized as a roundtable Conference, which allowed all invited panellists to interact, ask and discuss the main themes of the event. Additionally, participants in the audience could ask questions and hence find out everything they need to know about the possibilities of their personal and professional growth within the European Union.

The main topics and simultaneously the titles of two panels of the Conference were “The Youth in the EU, the situation and the facts” and “Beyond Erasmus, after 20 years of success”. The Workshops of the organizations, which offer the educational, professional and mobility projects for students and graduates, were the important parts of the event. Many significant guests from all around Europe, the representatives of various governmental and non-governmental organizations as well as many academic lecturers, students and graduates attended the Conference.

The moderator of the Conference was François Lafond, the Executive Director of the Paris think tank EuropaNova, associate professor at the Sciences-Po, a member of the scientific committee of the Institute of European Democrats (IED) and a member of the executive board of the IGMO. Previously, he was the executive director of the French Aspen Institute, the director of the Paris Office of The German Marshall Fund of the United State, a special adviser of the Italian Minister for Regional Affairs and Local Autonomies and a responsible for international relations of the think tank Glocus in Roma. He was therefore a very important guest who took on the role of the moderator of the Conference.

ORGANISERS:

The Conference was organized by the Institute of European Democrats (IED) together with Young Europeans (Mladí Európania, ME). Institute of European Democrats (IED) is a political and cultural independent Research Institute based in Brussels. IED offers fresh political ideas as well as a strong and respected cultural background to the European Democratic Party (PDE-EDP) to which it is formally affiliated. Like all political foundations at the European level formally recognised by the European Parliament, IED was established with the support of the European institutions in order to be a political think tank. The Institute of European Democrats promotes a wide range of activities that include studies and analysis, workshops and public conferences. In order to contribute to develop a political debate at the EU level, thanks to a well-developed European-wide network, IED organizes international conferences and seminars where politicians, experts, EU and national officials, academics and others can discuss and share ideas.

Young European (Mladí Európania, ME) is a Slovak youth organization which gathers young people who are not careless about the world around. It is a youth partner of the Slovak European Democratic Party (EDP/EDS). It supports an idea that young people have to be active and therefore they try to show, through their activities, to other young people that public affairs as well as the life within the European Union directly concern us and affect our everyday lives. The goal of organization is the general enlightenment, education, gathering of youth, development of their cooperation and raising awareness of the life within the Community (not only) in Europe.

The Conference was opened by Luca Bader, the Chief Executive Officer of the Institute of European Democrats (IED). In his speech, Bader emphasized the significance of the EU youth programmes and their importance for the integration of young people into the professional world and society in general. “We made Europe, European institutions and the European system within which the EU works – however, we still have to make the European generation,” Bader highlighted. In this respect, he expressed his great support for the EU programmes such as Erasmus+, but also his belief for the need of more investments to the EU youth initiatives because they are the investment to the future European generations, which will feel truly European. Simultaneously, he is convinced the EU political debate has to be opened towards the youth and support for them and their professional and personal growth in the EU.

Miroslava Calegari

Miroslava Calegari, the President of the youth organization Young Democrats for Europe (YDE), youth platform of PDE-EDP, prepared the video speech which she addressed directly to youth. She emphasized that issue of youth in the EU is one of the main areas of interest of organization YDE, within which they gather active young people and make them involved in various academic, political and mobility projects. “Young people – you are the future of Europe, European project and European unity. And when I look at you, I see unlimited opportunities,” Calegari ended.

The opening speech of Lýdia Hirošová, the President of the youth organization Young Europeans (Mladí Európania, ME), was focused on the experience of her organization in working with young people. She mentioned that Young Europeans were created as the pro-European Slovak youth platform and the members of the organization are very proud that they can spread European message among students and young people in Slovakia. Most of members of ME have a direct experience with the EU youth programmes and they want to promote the advantages of these youth initiatives among young people in Slovakia as well as abroad.

Lýdia Hirošová

François Lafond

François Lafond expressed his enthusiasm for being the moderator and coordinator of the panels of the Conference. Especially, he praised the initiative to dedicate the entire Conference to the topic of the opportunities which the EU offers to young Europeans for their personal, academic and career development. According to Lafond, this is crucially important nowadays when the youth unemployment across EU member states is alarmingly high – in some states even two times higher than the unemployment of other age groups. It is therefore crucially important to discuss and promote the projects and programmes which the EU institutions as well as other governmental and non-governmental organizations working within the EU offer to young people in order to educate them, train them and raise them to future European professionals.

I.PANEL:

THE YOUTH IN THE EU, THE SITUATION AND FACTS.

The panellists of the first panel were Vlasta Kunová, Slovak academic Professor, Xabier Iñigo Ochandiano Martínez, the Director of Planning and Innovation on Employment of the Basque Government, Igor Hraško, the Member of the Slovak parliament, Peter McGuigan, a Researcher of the Institute of European Democrats (IED) and an assistant in the European Parliament to Irish MEP Marian Harkin (ALDE), Jana Stadtruckerová, a Representative of the Section of Implementation of State policies and European and International Initiatives of Research and Development of the Slovak Ministry of Education, Science, Research and Sport and Sarah Robin, a Youth representative of international youth organization of Young Democrats for Europe (YDE).

“The concept of Europeanism has its roots in the Roman law,” Slovak academic Professor Vlasta Kunová said during the opening speech for the first panel, by which she proved that the idea of united Europe is older than thousand years.

As a result, the European project is not a new idea, but it is the concept which has its theoretical background in the legal system of Ancient Rome, which historical importance is unquestionable. However, the education, a basis for advanced Europe, is a field which experiences continuous differences across the EU member states. As an academic Professor with many years of experience in the field, she is convinced that there is a great need for the coordination of the educational systems of EU member countries and unification of them into a single European educational platform. This is related also to the need for connection of education to practice in order to prepare students for the professional world and increase their chances to be successful in the labour market. According to Professor Kunová, the politics of education in USA is much modern and interconnected to the needs of labour market than the European ones. As a consequence, the EU should take an example from the US educational system in its united concept as well as in its interconnection with practice, which is the key for decreasing of unemployment of young European graduates.

In the view of Xabier Iñigo Ochandiano Martínez, the Director of Planning and Innovation on Employment of the Basque Government, youth unemployment is a highly structural problem. He emphasized that data have to be analysed better in this field. The Employment services manage a lot of data, but they are not always used efficiently. “We have to transform the data into information and information into knowledge to plan better,” said Ochandiano Martínez, “and of course we have to listen directly to young people.” Other problem lies, in his view, in qualification and skills. “It is difficult for young graduates with no work experience to get employed, despite of the fact they have mobility experience and speak many languages,” he said on behalf of problems which young university graduates experience when looking for job. As a consequence, work experience is crucially important today. He sees the solution in looking at the needs of the companies and the gap between that and qualifications of young people. The proper transition from education to the labour market is crucially important. According to him, money from the EU may help countries and regions to set up initiatives, but firstly we have to look to ourselves and plan well. In addition, it is very important to share good practices at the European level, between countries and regions.

The Member of the Slovak National Council Igor Hraško was evaluating the pros and cons which students' experience on mobility programmes give to the state. The aim of the state is bring people, who studied or worked abroad, back to home country where they could use their experience, skills and knowledge acquired abroad for benefit of their mother country. This is also the case of Slovakia which needs such people for the Ministries, National Council and related. He emphasized that mainly post-communist states such as Slovakia need ambitious, skilled and open-minded graduates to replace people of the former regime on high state positions. Hraško also added that “Slovakia has plenty of skilled and clever people who may become “creators” of jobs”. However, the system must allow them to do this and make this possible by, for instance, making the entry to the business sector easier.

Peter McGuigan, a Researcher of the Institute of European Democrats (IED) and assistant in the European Parliament to Irish MEP Marian Harkin (ALDE), entered the debate by important fact that youth unemployment rate is highest ever. “The EU-28 unemployment rate was 9.8% in March 2015. Among the Member States, the lowest unemployment rate in March 2015 was recorded in Germany (4.7%) and the highest in Greece (25.7% in January 2015) and Spain (23.0%),” McGuigan said. From his point of view, youth is going through a very difficult time at present, especially in terms of employment and entry to the labour market. In fact, since the European project began, young people have never faced a situation whereby their parents would have a better standard of living and quality of life compared to them. From a political perspective of the EU, there has been some developments, namely recognition by the new Commission that youth unemployment is a main priority. “President Juncker has stated prior to being elected that there was a “lack of social fairness” in the European economy since the crisis and that there needs to be a move back towards the social market economy,” he informed. This is supposed to be performed also through the Youth Guarantee programme, which seeks to ensure that all EU Member States make a good-quality offer to all young people up to age 25 of a job, continued education, an apprenticeship or a traineeship within four months of leaving formal education or becoming unemployed. “These initiatives that the EU have set up to tackle unemployment focus on creating a flexible and educated workforce which can easily move from the classroom to the workplace,” McGuigan concluded.

A Youth representative of the international youth organization of Young Democrats for Europe (YDE) Sarah Robin presented the view of the problem mainly from a perspective of youth. She sees a big issue in the fact that young people can influence the EU as well as national politics towards youth education and employment very hardly. This is, according to Robin, the root of the problem, because consequently, youth problems are continuing to be solved by older politicians. “Less than 10% of MEPs are younger than 40 years,” she emphasized. In her view, the dialogue between youth organizations and institutions and EU/state/local authorities has to improve and become more efficient. What is more, young people have to be involved more in the political processes and decision-making, mainly in regards to the issues which directly concern them.

Jana Stadtruckerová, a Representative of the Section of Implementation of State policies and European and International Initiatives of Research and Development of the Slovak Ministry of Education, Science, Research and Sport, was talking mainly about the practise of the Ministry with the EU projects, which the Ministry supports mainly through the structural funds. “It is extremely important to link education with labour market,” she said concerning a high number of young Slovak graduates, who cannot find job, especially a job related to their education. She assured that the Slovak Ministry of Education works on various new schemes in order to adjust education to the needs of labour market. According to Stadtruckerová, the Ministry works also on the scheme which aim is to attract Slovaks who studied abroad and/or work abroad to return to their home country. In this regard, she presented the new scheme of the Slovak Ministry of Education called “Coming Home” which focuses to help Slovaks, studying or working abroad, to return to Slovakia and work there.

The moderator François Lafond added that many things towards improving of the situation of youth in the EU has progressed, however, there are still many issues which need reform alarmingly, such as an interconnection of education to the needs of labour market as well as a greater link between education and internships in the companies related to their study subjects.

II.PANEL: BEYOND ERASMUS, AFTER 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS.

The panellists of the second panel were Slavomír Rudenko, Slovak academic professor, lawyer and a Member of the Board of Institute of European Democrats (IED), Marcela Hajtmánková, the Director of the Department of Support and Development of Work with Youth of the Slovak Youth Institute IUVENTA, Zuzana Poláčková, a Representative of EPIC – the agent for Erasmus for Young Entrepreneurs programme in Slovakia, Ondrej Mäsiar, the Chairman of the organization promoting European Voluntary Service MladiInfo and Lýdia Hirošová, a Youth Representative of Young Europeans (ME).

“It does not happen every day that Erasmus creates such important part of the Conference,” said Slovak academic professor, lawyer and a Member of the Board of Institute of European Democrats (IED) Slavomír Rudenko in the beginning of his opening speech. He praised the success of this mobility programme which may be visible not only on thousands of young Europeans who gained extremely valuable experience thanks to Erasmus, but also on the fact that Erasmus is going to be transported to the third world countries. “This means Erasmus is something which may inspire the whole world,” Rudenko emphasized. In Rudenko's view, it is fantastic privilege that everyone who wants to go abroad can really go abroad. “It is not just a pure initiative, it is something which has changed the lives of many – the whole generation has been grown on Erasmus,” Rudenko highlighted. However, even 3-months long experience acquired during Erasmus may change a student's preferences and may influence that s/he will decide to leave his/her home country and replace it for the country of his/her Erasmus stay. This, in his words, has to be changed. In addition, Rudenko thinks that not only universities but also private sectors and NGOs should join the mobility programmes such as Erasmus and start to offer foreign internships and work mobility programmes to students. In his view, this could significantly improve the difficulties which young graduates experience when looking for job.

The Director of the Department of Support and Development of Work with Youth of the Slovak Youth Institute IUVENTA Marcela Hajtmánková explained the history of youth programmes in Slovakia. She presented very beginnings of the youth initiatives in Slovakia which started with the initiative “Youth for Europe” in 1996 and the programme “Youth” in 1998, which target was to make young Slovaks more pro-European orientated. In 2007, the programme “Youth in Action” and the Programme of Lifetime Learning, administrated by two national agencies for youth programmes SAAIC - National Agency of the Lifelong Learning Programme and IUVENTA, began to run. In 2014, they joined together to Erasmus+ programme. Hajtmánková emphasized that over 15 000 Slovaks participated in “Youth in Action” during 7 years of its existence, which she considers as a significant number. “What is more, most of Slovaks who completed volunteering (within above stated programmes) have been successful to get employed in a similar field in which their volunteering was based on,” Hajtmánková said. However, she sees a problem in the fact that still more foreign students and young people coming to Slovakia for mobility and volunteering programmes than Slovaks going abroad.

Zuzana Poláčková, a Representative of EPIC organization, which is the agent for Erasmus for Young Entrepreneurs programme in Slovakia, was talking about the specifics of Erasmus for Young Entrepreneurs, which is becoming very popular across Europe. “Erasmus for Young Entrepreneurs is a perfect supplementation to Erasmus+,” Poláčková expressed, “and it is for people who want to do business, have real business plans and need help with their implementations.” In her opinion, the programme provides a perfect structure for those, who want to establish the organization, business company and related. It is also one of the key solutions how to decrease youth unemployment in Europe.

Ondrej Mäsiar, the Chairman of the organization promoting European Voluntary Service (EVS) MladiInfo, entered the debate by praising Erasmus+ for providing not only university exchange programmes and motilities for teachers, but also the volunteering opportunities. From his point of view, “a key task is that students and young people would like to not only do traineeships and university exchanges but also to volunteer.” He sees great advantages and positives in volunteering – according to the statistics of MladiInfo, 95% of their past and present volunteers confirm their English has improved a lot thanks to volunteering mobility and 70% of them confirm that volunteering has helped them to find a job. What is more, Mäsiar stated that on the basis of latest findings of EVS, 80% of well-known and large European companies said it is important that their future employees would have experience in volunteering.

European Volunteering Service was further and very interestingly presented by David Hluško, an EVS volunteer, who made a video call from Hanoi, Vietnam, where he was doing volunteering. Within volunteering, he was teaching English to Vietnamese university students as well as he was working for several NGOs. In his opinion, EVS is a perfect way how to gain new skills and abilities, know new people, gain new friends, improve languages, travel and get to know new places, different cultures, traditions and habits as well as do something for people who need it. Hluško is very glad he had received the opportunity to volunteer in Vietnam, the country which has attracted him to such a scale that he wants to return there in the future.

“I am very happy that I am a member of the generation within which I do not need to ask whether I could go to study for semester or year abroad but I ask where I will go to study,” a Youth Representative of Young Europeans (ME) Lýdia Hirošová said. However, she is worried why so low number of students in Slovakia complete the mobility programmes. More information and greater propagation of the EU programmes among young people are needed in order to attract them. Last but not least, she believes more information on the EU programmes should be provided for HR officers in order to value graduates with mobility or volunteering experience more than those who have no such kind of experience.

The moderator François Lafond closed the discussion by summary of all improvements and achievements of the programme Erasmus after more than twenty years of its existence on the European continent. Last but not least, he believes that harmonization of education is a crucial task which needs to be performed across the EU because precisely Erasmus has detected how great differences among national systems of education exist among EU member states. “You are the ones who can influence the future in every field,” Lafond concluded, “you just have to work on yourselves and take risks.”

WORKSHOPS

The partner organizations and visiting organizations offered the Workshops at the Conference. Through them, information about the specific capabilities and features of individual programmes were presented to the audience. This was accompanied by the discussion on the conditions, course and application forms for particular programmes, especially for the programme Erasmus+. The representatives of several Slovak and European youth organizations such as AEGEE Bratislava – European Students' Forum, MladiInfo, Mladi Europania / Young Europeans / and Nová Generácia / New Generation / participated in the workshops. In addition, direct experience of individuals who completed the EU youth programmes were presented to the audience.

After the workshops, the moderator of the Conference François Lafond concluded the event by the summarization and repetition of main findings and arguments presented in both discussion panels of the Conference as well as at the Workshops of the youth organizations.
